

Co-funded by the European Union

In the European Union, all professional drivers of vehicles with a total weight of more than 3.5 t and professional drivers of buses with more than eight seats are required to undergo mandatory training on certain topics every five years (35 hours). These courses are conducted by various trainers such as driving school instructors, lawyers, experts on the subject of eco-driving and load securing experts. These trainers have very good know-how in the hard skills of the training courses. In practice, however, it is often the soft skills that are lacking. These include: Designing C95 training days, moderating discussion processes, entertaining lectures and presentations, story telling, dividing into small groups, guiding and supervising, dealing with technology, media and material. This is all the more important because the target group of lorry and bus drivers are not used to a 7-hour training day and therefore the didactic skills of the trainers are needed to create an entertaining and active training process. This is exactly the aim of the Pro95trainer project.
